In order to achieve a correct regulation of these devices, it is necessary to distinguish them, since there are no technical characteristics that differentiate them from one another, precisely on the basis of the aims pursued by those who use them. In this direction, however, the same legislator has moved, which, in implementation of the provisions contained in Directive 2009/136 / EC, led back the obligation to obtain the preventive and informed consent of users to the installation of cookies used for purposes different from purely technical ones.
